Excerpt: .us-- a man who was a mixture of St. Paul, and of St. Francis of Assisi. Of course, I do not mean to say that Manikka-Vacagar taught the whole truth, certainly not, but the spirit of the man was such that he renounced everything to follow his convictions. He dated his conversion to his God from a certain hour, and from the fact that from that hour he was a new man. I think I may say that he lived very much the life of St. Paul to the end. A greater man, outside Christianity, than this sage, I believe never existed. He was the great reviver of the Qaiva system, and is called in their writings, the Hammer of the Buddhists. He went over to Ceylon, and there saw the king, preached Qaivisrn, was very ill-treated by the Buddhist monks, and then went home. The...
