Excerpt: .the country round, staying overnight at the village inns. Sasaki and Iwabuchi have been my companions. I have seen the paper manufactories, oil-presses, the sake breweries, soy-vats, iron-foundries, and smelting-furnaces. I have entered the copper mines of One, and prospected the coal region, from which the coal I burn in my Peekskill stove comes. While on one trip, as I was leading my horse, Green Willow, down a steep slope, being close behind Sasaki s horse, well-named Devil s Eye, the vicious brute, after squinting sideways at me, and seeing his opportunity, threw out his left hind hoof and kicked me. The soft part between the fetlock and hoof struck just above my knee, giving me a shock, but doing no serious injury. His hoof would have broken my leg. The incident has served to warp and prejudice my judgment of Japanese horses in...
