Balked of their prey they refused to leave the house, threatening to burn it down, unless the Doctor was delivered to them. In the end one of the Magistrates came to his rescue, and took him off to the town prison, from which he was released the next day after a reprimand from the Prince. Clough, writing the next day referring to the Request presented by the Gueux to the Regent, says, if she do not give them answer the 23rd day, and such an answer as they look for, which it is thought she will not, then it is doubtful that here will be a foul stir, for, as far as I can perceive, the Protestants do more than they were minded to do, because they would see if the Papists would begin, which if they do, I doubt they...
