Co. which has recently been completed, displays some examples of excellent paper mill engineering. On account of its unprecedented size, the plant presented some difficult problems in design and construction which were ably met by the engineers and by the manufacturers of the various parts of the equipment. The conveyors are said to be the largest of this type that have ever been constructed and their success, here, has brought several requests for information regarding them. A description of the salient features of their construction may, therefore, be of considerable interest, taking up both the special details of construction and, also, the general arrangement of the conveyor system with respect to the entire plant. Seven drag conveyors constitute the system, these being used to convey the straw from the sheds to the rotary cookers,...
